As part of this commitment we are operating a contextual offer scheme to give reduced grade/ tariff offers to students applying from certain schools, where we are keen to actively encourage progression into higher education. As part of this scheme, applicants from your institution will be eligible to be considered for a contextualised offer when applying through UCAS to start in September 2022 This lower UCAS tariff benchmark will be automatically calculated and applied to applications received from your students. University Widening Participation schemes (WP only)

1. If you take part in an event or opportunity at a specific university you do not then have to apply to that university
2. Most activities are free unless otherwise stated
3. You should check each university that you are applying to and determine whether they have a Widening Participation programme, each university will have its own criteria and it is your responsibility to check whether you meet their requirements.
4. Widening Participation may lead to a reduced grade offer at some universities but this is not the case at all universities. Universities run schemes that can lead to reduced grades and these may start in Year 12 or Year 13. Examples of these schemes are below

If you need further support please email wp@bhavic.ac.uk Kind regards, Lynne Trower

Contextual offers are when universities take into account applicants' personal circumstances when considering each candidate. For example, a university's normal entry requirements might be ABB at A-Level, but if you've attended a school with low progression rates to higher education or you've spent time in local authority care, they will lower the requirements to BCC. Over the last few years contextual offers have become common in UK universities.

The idea behind contextual offers is to make access to Higher Education more equitable for disadvantaged students. In deciding whether or not to make a contextual offer, a university will look at the wider circumstances surrounding your achievements so far. They'll consider things such as where you grew up, whether you have a disability, or whether you're entitled to free school meals.

If you meet their criteria, you'll then be accepted onto the course with lower entry requirements than those usually needed, or sometimes the academic entry requirements will remain the same, but your application will be given special consideration. At the University of Oxford, for example, the admissions tutors look at your application and 'raise flags as appropriate'; in some instances, 'students with such flags will be strongly recommended for interview.'

How will my application be assessed?

Each application will be considered by the university on a case-by-case basis. By looking at your personal situation, admissions tutors will assess your potential to succeed on an undergraduate course.

Typical criteria for contextual offers

Not all UK universities make contextual offers. For those that do, each one sets its own criteria, but they usually include a few of the following:

- You have a disability.
- You're a young carer. A carer is anyone who cares, unpaid, for a friend or family member who cannot cope without support due to illness, disability, a mental health problem or an addiction.
- You've had your educational studies hindered by circumstances in your personal, social or domestic life.

- You've been separated from your family.
- You're applying from an eligible school, college or sixth form. For example, if the performance of your school, college or sixth form is lower than the national average, your academic performance so far might be given special consideration.
- You've spent time in local authority care. Very often, you'll need to declare that you're a care leaver on the UCAS form and have it confirmed by your referee.
- You're a refugee.
- You're a first generation Higher Education attendee (you're the first in your family to attend higher education).
- You're entitled to discretionary payments or free school meals at school/college.
- Some universities run an access, widening participation or outreach programme, and completion of this might make you eligible (contact the university to find out how to be considered for this on your application).
- You live in an area with less advantaged socio-economic characteristics. This will usually be assessed using the POLAR or ACORN postcode search.

POLAR (Participation of Local Areas)

POLAR is a classification tool that groups areas across the UK based on the proportion of young people who participate in higher education. The most recent version of this classification tool is POLAR4, which is based on the findings of a 2017 report carried out by the Higher Education Funding Council for England. The report looks at how likely young people are to participate in higher education across the UK and shows how this varies by area.

POLAR classifies local areas into five groups - or 'quintiles' - based on the proportion of 18 and 19-year-olds from that area who enter higher education. Quintile one shows the lowest rate of participation. Quintile five shows the highest rate of participation.

A university that offers contextual offers based on a POLAR postcode search might, for example, give special consideration to applicants from the lowest two quintiles.

You can access a POLAR postcode look-up tool here.

ACORN

ACORN is a classification tool that associates specific geodemographic profiles to individual UK postcodes. It was created by CACI – a market analysis and location strategy consultancy – to help people understand consumers' lifestyle, behavior and attitudes, together with the needs of communities. It's widely recognised and used by both the public and private sectors to help with the effective targeting of policies, services and communications. Your postcode might fall into a particular ACORN group, such as group four ('financially stretched') or five ('urban adversity'), in which case you might qualify for a contextual offer.

You can find out more about ACORN here.

Worth knowing: Sometimes a contextual offer will only apply if you accept the university in question as your firm choice.

How to apply

For many contextual offers your UCAS application will be assessed by the admissions tutors when you apply to the university and there is no need to do anything extra. However, for others you will need to complete a separate application form and submit this to the University before, or at the same time as, applying through UCAS.

 Student Action for Refugees  WE BELONG — YOUNG MIGRANTS STANDING UP —	Many young people who are living in the UK do not have equal access to higher education because of their immigration status. They may be treated as international students and denied access to student finance, often only finding this out after they have already been accepted at university. This can leave their education and career ambitions in tatters. The good news is that there are now over 80 universities who offer scholarships for refugee and migrant students! Student Action for Refugees (STAR) and We Belong - two national charities advocating for equal access to higher education for young migrants, refugees and asylum seekers - have partnered to create a higher education information pack for school and college staff helping young people get to university: https://bit.ly/STARWBinfo It's with your help that we can make sure that young refugees and migrants get the right information and support. Please read the STAR and We Belong information pack and reach out to young people at BHASVIC who may need support to apply to university. I believe it is vital for your students to get this information and support soon so that their futures are not delayed. For more information and contact details you can visit www.webelong.org.uk and www.star-network.org.uk.

BHASVIC Bursary Students	Travel for University Visits – We may support students with travel costs to attend university events such as Open Days, Applicant Days or Admissions Interviews. When deciding whether we can support a request, we will consider whether the trip is compulsory or optional, whether the university offers financial support for this purpose, and whether there is a viable alternative e.g. taking part virtually. All awards made under this category will be dependent on the budget we have available at the time. If funds are available, we will support students with a maximum of two visits per academic year. The amount awarded will be calculated using the cheapest form of public transport from BHASVIC to your destination, and will also take all available travel discounts into account. We will not pay for overnight accommodation costs associated with visits to universities, and can only support the costs of the student, not those of anybody travelling with them. Support under this category is not assessed automatically and you will need to contact us if this cost arises for you. Contact details are: bursary@bhasvic.ac.uk
