Career Prospects

In the world of work, students often go into environment and heritage work, but also to general jobs in areas like marketing, business analysis and management. On the human and social geography side, there is a shortage of students with really good Maths skills, and students from these disciplines are in demand from modern industry. An ability to combine good data handling with good communication and social skills will really help start your career.

Geography graduates work for a wide range of employers including government agencies, banks, management consultants and environmental businesses.
